Seatbelt law will help ensure parents buckle up their children in UAE

The head of the UAE Federal Traffic Council has said that a new law on seatbelts will come into force in the “near future” as the biggest obstacle to getting parents to buckle up their children is the lack of a law making it mandatory. The long-awaited law, which has been mooted for several years, is expected to make it mandatory for everyone in the back to buckle up, including children. At present, it is only law that front-seat passengers buckle up. Last week, General Mohammed Saif Al Zafeen, head of the UAE Federal Traffic Council said that a new on seatbelts will come into force in the “near future”. Al Zafeen said the council has proposed fining drivers Dhs400 if passengers are not wearing seatbelts.
